Not illustrated. 1903 Excerpt: .in the President s proclamation of blockade, but which were in communication with Havana. The main object of the blockade was the reduction of Havana by the peaceful though necessarily distressing expedient of cutting off supplies. It was destined to failure unless the cordon about Cuba were extended. The Department therefore determined to recommend the blockade of the coast of Cuba from Cape Francis, near the Yucatan Channel, to Cape Cruz, a short distance to the westward of Santiago. As the vessels carrying supplies to Havana usually entered Batabano, which was in railroad communication with the capital, that port was necessarily included within the limits of the blockade. A few miles from Batabano lies the Isle of Pines. This it was determined to seize for use as a base and harbor of refuge for small vessels operating in its vicinity, and at the time the peace protocol was signed, the Marine battalion, which had done such excellent work at Guantanamo, was on its way to effect occupation. A further complication was added to the war situation when the State Department was advised on June 18 that the reserve fleet of Spain, consisting of one battle-ship, one armored cruiser, six converted cruisers, and four destroyers, besides auxiliary vessels, under the command of Admiral Camara, was on its way to the Philippines from the Spanish Peninsula. A week before the report of Camara s departure reached the Navy Department, the monitor Monterey sailed from San Diego, California, via...
