Language: English Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Planning Secondary School Buildings Since the turn of the century America s program of secondary education has grown with great rapidity. The enrollments have been climbing to high percentages of school-age youth. The curriculum has been broadened to meet the needs of all types of students. There has been expansion downward and upward as the junior high school and the junior College have been established. The services of the school in the library, the cafeteria, the dramatic and fine arts, the home arts, in vocational education, and in physical education have shown significant advancement. School and community interests have been closely joined. Guidance and counseling have become outstanding features of administration. Student activities have been fully recognized for their educational values. In fact, every classroom and laboratory subject has been widened in scope as it has felt the impact of our rapidly changing civilization. School executives, supervisors, and teachers with high professional training have contributed liberally to the unprecedented growth and adjustment represented by these trends in secondary education. Teaching methods have been improved. Audio-visual means of learning have been introduced extensively. The democratization of the school s management has been accepted as a desirable goal. As secondary education has matured, much of the success of new ventures depended upon the capacity and character of the school plant. School buildings, of course, are not at flexible as the school program or the curricula. The past five decades have witnessed a steady improvement in the kind of buildings but without sufficient adaptation of the plant to the needs of the educational program. During this period a new type of high school has been in the making, but...
