Therefore, we do not know if the grantee has made sufficient plans to address this potential circumstance. Measuring change in specific outcome variables at both baseline and after a follow-up period may not always be feasible. When the outcome of interest is recidivism, such as whether drug-involved criminal defendants continue to commit criminal offenses after participating in a drug treatment program, the outcome can only be measured after the program is delivered. In this case, it is important that the follow-up period be long...
